This image shows a single page from an antique Cambodian manuscript. The text is written in a traditional form of the Khmer language, using the standard four-vowel system. The script is fluid and appears to be a cursive style. A prominent feature is a large, circular red ink seal located on the left margin. The seal contains several lines of text, which are partially obscured but appear to be administrative or ownership-related. The main body of the text is organized into two columns per line, with some lines being significantly longer than others. The paper has a warm, yellowish tint, characteristic of old documents. There are some minor physical damages, such as small holes and discoloration, visible on the surface.

The center features a stylized tree, likely a palm or a banyan tree, with a small figure standing next to it.
